Sorry I forgot to turn on “track changes,” Joe, so it’s not completely obvious where I’m suggesting a few edits. In particular, though, I think we should be cautious using the phrase “EPA has finalized . . .”. We have a long history of saying that we would not consider the models “final” without interested stakeholders’ comments being considered. I guess that’s what the states will now be doing (instead of EPA), but I think we can get our point across by simply saying we have “completed” our modeling work.
